Proposed puppy ban upsets pet store owner

▶ Richmond set to become the first Canadian city to ban the sale of dogs in pet stores ▶ The proposed ban is meant to target puppy mills ▶ The sale of pet store rabbits was banned last year

SARAH N. FITZGERALD
VANCOUVER@METRONEWS.CA

Ernest Ang says he feels targeted by the City of Richmond's proposed bylaw that would ban pet stores from selling puppies and dogs.

"We don't deal with puppy mills, we're against (them)," said Ang. "So why did they target me?"

The ban isn't meant to harm local businesses, said Coun. Ken Johnston. "It's targeting puppy mills" both inside and outside the city's jurisdiction.

Ang's store, Pet Habitat, is one of only three Richmond stores that would be affected.

Another worry, said Ang, is if the municipality decides to prohibit the sale of any live animal at pet stores in the future.

"It's so sad that (eventually) the children of Richmond may not have a place to go to interact with pets they want to own."

"I think they made (the) wrong decision. They should work with (pet stores) to really get to the source of this problem — puppy mills."
ERNEST ANG, OWNER OF PET HABITAT

Live animals are Pet Habitat's main attraction, said Ang. The large pet-supply box stores have "taken away all the pet-supply business."

The city voted to draft the bylaw Monday night. Councillors are expected to vote next week on giving it preliminary approval, followed by public consultation. Pet store owners would have until next spring to remove all dogs.

Brakes slammed on bike lane talks at council

Only three of 38 scheduled speakers got to grind council's gears yesterday morning over a separated bike lane that has been proposed for Hornby Street.

Council chambers were packed with people wanting to have their say on the proposed $3.2-million separated lane that would connect the bike lanes on the Burrard Bridge and Dunsmuir Street. But time constraints meant the session had to be reconvened to last night.

$4M To put the cost of the project in context, a single left-turn bay like those recently installed on Knight Street costs between $3 and $4 million.

David Prior, owner of Rumours Hair Salon on Hornby, was among those who addressed council. He said his concerns are accessibility and increased traffic congestion in the area because of restricted right turns.

Jerry Dobrovolny, Vancouver's director of transportation, said the planners worked with businesses to address their concerns. He said the project's budget jump to $3.2 million from early estimates of $2.2 million reflected the "significant" increase in the number of loading areas for businesses.

While Lesya Holubowich was at school yesterday, her mother Lorraine fought back tears as she picked up her daughter's four awards at the Downtown Eastside Photography Contest Award Ceremony at Carnegie Community Centre.

Twelve-year-old Lesya's photograph, Monkey Bars, tied for third in the black-and-white category and is included in the 2011 Hope in Shadows calendar. This is the first year the calendar will include colour photos.

The Holubowich family was recently homeless for two months until the non-profit Pivot Legal Society and Portland Housing Society helped them find a home.

Pivot has been holding the annual photography contest since 2003, giving out disposable cameras to participants. Lorraine stood in line to get one for her daughter.

Judges selected 40 winners from 4,000 submissions this year.

"Hope in Shadows has changed the way people see our community all over the world," said Elisha May Walker, whose photograph Shadow Friends won second place in the colour category.

A collection of the photographs will show at the Pendulum Gallery, 885 W. Georgia St., from Oct. 12 to 23.

Hurt dog receiving donations

Almost $7,000 collected so far

Nearly a hundred people have shelled out thousands of dollars to help pay for the recovery of a local guide dog.

The dog, Palm, was nearly killed last week after being dragged along the platform at a Burnaby station by a SkyTrain.

"It's nice to see people being so generous," said Sharon Brown, administrator of the veterinary hospital taking care of Palm. "It restores your faith in humanity."

So far most of the donations have been under $100, but there have been some as high as $250. Donations have even come in from Ontario.

Palm's medical expenses are expected to cost around $15,000. So far, $6,900 has been donated.

To learn how you can help, call Canada West Veterinary Hospital at 604-473-4882.

Prostate screening not magic bullet: Official

Prostate screening can potentially do more harm than good, the head of the B.C. Cancer Agency (BCCA) said in response to a plea by the NDP to create a province-wide program.

BCCA president Dr. David Levy said such program are considered to have a "low evidence of benefit."

While many men develop some evidence of prostate cancer, its slow progression means that a smaller number of men develop symptoms requiring treatment.

Two recent studies, however, have suggested a benefit to screening. The BCCA, he said, would review evidence before making a recommendation to the Ministry of Health.

HOT AND BOTHERED BABY BOOMERS

Just sayin'

PAUL SULLIVAN

This just in: A Canadian Liver Foundation survey finds that baby boomers don't practise safe sex.

It's Mondo Viagra out there. One in three unmarried boomers aged 46 to 64 have unprotected sex with a new partner. Forty per cent of boomer men are open to one-night stands; 33 per cent of boomers are into online dating; 57 per cent "feel freer" about sex; and 82 per cent believe it's important to have an active sex life, even at their age.

It's news that has an entire generation of adult children going "eeeeyyyyeeeewwww."

But I don't know why everyone is so surprised. After all, boomers grew up during the "sexual revolution" of the '60s, a clumsy, groping, inappropriately dressed era during which it was OK to love the one you're with.

The sexual revolution is a thread that continues to run through society, although it's unravelling rapidly, like that leisure suit in the back of the closet.

It was fatally infected by HIV, which any minister or priest will tell you is the microscopic wrath of God. Obviously, the baby boom is getting hard of hearing. And thanks to Viagra, that's not the only thing that's getting hard.

"Obviously, the baby boom is getting hard of hearing. And thanks to Viagra, that's not the only thing that's getting hard."

I guess when the Beatles wrote When I'm 64, they didn't anticipate the future would include drug-induced supercharged priapism. The drug companies have created an epidemic of erectile dysfunction, targeting guys who once accepted the decrease in desire as yet another sign they will soon meet a tall dark stranger, and it won't just be a one-night stand.

I was watching a football game the other day and learned that 40 per cent of adult males suffer from erectile dysfunction. When 40 per cent are affected, isn't that normal? Why not just give in to your real secret urge to collect stamps, then have a nap … or just forget about the stamps and go straight to the nap?

You play, you pay, says the Liver Foundation. If you're wondering if this survey is being brought to you by the wrong organ, it's instructive to learn that 45 per cent of hepatitis B infections are contracted by boomers, not to mention all those other nasty little bugs out there disguised as Julie, 54, loves walks at sunset along the beach, or Eric, 60, still believes in magic. Yeah, right.

So the next time you feel bad, fellow boomer, because you would rather have a glass of warm milk than tempt the fates, just remember, the milk is pasteurized. And enjoy.

Diamonds are forever

Worth mentioning

Big pink

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A rare pink diamond that goes on sale next month could fetch up to $38 million US, according to auctioneers Sotheby's.

The "fancy intense pink" 24.78 carat gem is being sold by an unidentified private collector, the auction house said.

"We're able to say it's been in the possession of the same owner for 60 years, but beyond that we're not able to reveal more," Sotheby's spokesman Matthew Weigman said yesterday.

The diamond was last sold by New York jeweller Harry Winston and has a classic emerald cut with gently rounded corners, the company said. The stone has a flaw unnoticeable to the naked eye, probably due to wear, but may be graded internally flawless after re-polishing.

"It is sensational as it is, but if somebody would bother to repolish it they would have an even more sensational stone," said Daniela Mascetti, a senior director in the company's jewelry department.

"But I personally would not touch the stone if I was planning to wear it."

The diamond went on exhibition worldwide starting in Hong Kong Saturday and will go up for auction Nov. 18 in Geneva, when Sotheby's estimates it could sell for $27 million to $38 million. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jobs to be scarce, wages modest: TD

In the four quarters beginning July 2009, the economy has already managed to recoup lost jobs

Canada's employment picture is getting darker, according to a new report that predicts jobs will be scarce in the next year or so, and wage gains modest.

Job gains will fall to under 200,000 next year, just over half of the 350,000-plus jobs that is expected as the final tally for this year, predicts the TD Bank report released Tuesday.

Average wages will rise at under two per cent for the next few years - just keeping up with the anticipated inflation rate.

"It's going to be a period of tough employment growth," said Derek Burleton, deputy chief economist with the bank.

"Already we are seeing wage gains that are tepid."

Recent data from Statistics Canada shows the slowdown in employment has already begun, coinciding with a similar braking in economic growth.

Burleton says he expects monthly gains in the 5,000- to 10,000-a-month range for the rest of the year.

The consensus among economists is that Friday's jobs report will show a modest 10,000 pickup in September, which basically keeps pace with new entrants entering the labour force.

Burleton said the report is not all bad news, given that Canada has seen a remarkable rebound in employment since the recession.

13K

Employment growth averaged about 13,000 in July and August, after averaging 51,000 a month in the first six months of the year.

Directing duo make perfect team

Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck take on latest film project about troubled teen in psych ward

NED EHRBAR
@METRONEWS.CA

Working with two directors could easily be confusing for actors, so directing duo Anna Boden and Ryan Fleck have a system worked out.

"Only one of us will go off and talk to the actors," Fleck explains. "We'll never go up together, so they have to look at both of us and interpret both of what we're saying."

It's a system that's served them well on their previous features, the acclaimed Half Nelson and Sugar. And their latest, an adaptation of Ned Vizzini's young adult novel It's Kind of a Funny Story, shows no signs of confused actor syndrome.

The film follows Craig (Keir Gilchrist), an overwhelmed teen who checks himself into a psych ward only to be placed with adults, as the juvenile unit is being renovated.

Though the directors weren't familiar with Gilchrist's work on The United States of Tara, they were immediately taken with the 18-year-old actor.

"He's just such a teenager," Boden says. "He's this little punk kid, and he comes with his hoodie and all his patches, and he's not trying to be anything but who he is. Sometimes you meet with young actors and it's like they want to be sophisticated and professional, and there was just no pretense with him."

"We were all starting to lose steam a little bit, starting getting tired of being in the same place."
RYAN FLECK, DIRECTOR

But the most interesting bit of casting comes in the role of mentoring patient Bobby, played by Zach Galifianakis in his first mostly serious turn.

In fact, Galifianakis' comedic background almost stood in the way of his getting the part, according to Boden.

"We pretty much only knew him from The Hangover, and we were not convinced from that he was right for this," she says.

"But we looked back at some of his stand-up, and he's got something really interesting going on underneath the surface. There was this third side of him when we met him, this down-to-earth, charming, loveable, smiley person."

Fleck recalls that Galifianakis was just as valuable off screen as on. "Zach came late, for the second half," he says.

"We were all starting to lose steam a little bit, started getting tired of being in the same place, it was freezing outside and it was getting a little depressing. And then Zach shows up and just woke everybody up. He came in and was just charming and fun to have around."

In brief

Jason Schwartzman's dog had the face for TV — just not the back for it. Schwartzman, 30, stars in HBO's offbeat detective comedy Bored to Death, and show creator Jonathan Ames says he wanted to have Schwartzman's French bulldog, Arrow, in the show. Unfortunately Arrow has a bad back and was not up to the rigours of acting. Arrow did have a cameo in the show, though.

FINGER ELEVEN STAYS RELEVANT

"I wouldn't say Life Turns Electric, Finger Eleven's new record that's out today, is that much better than their last disc, but there are improvements."

When Finger Eleven first started playing music they'd have dreams of selling a million records.

Now that the band has hit that mark — they've sold more than two million copies of their 2007 disc Them vs. You vs. Me — they don't care how many albums go through the check out line.

"At the beginning you think you're not doing well unless you sell millions of records," says guitarist Rick Jackett. "The truth is it doesn't really matter."

Jackett blames a shifting music industry for his attitude change. "Major pop stars aren't selling," he says. Even for a band like Finger Eleven, it's their shows and merch that bring in the money.

Still, you'd expect the band to feel some sort of pressure to follow up their massive success. But Jackett disagrees. There's been no label interference and their only goal was to improve their songwriting.

"We've always had pressure on ourselves, to top our last record," Jackett says. Of course every band says that, but many have trouble matching a massive seller.

I wouldn't say Life Turns Electric, Finger Eleven's new record that's out today, is that much better than their last disc, but there are improvements.

The disc still has plenty of heavy riffs, pounding drums and Scott Anderson's alt.rock wail, but the group also tackles pop and funk.

Their single Living in a Dream is unlikely to match Paralyzer's success, but its Franz Ferdinand-like verses is a nice change from their heavy rock.

Jackett chalks up the poppier sound to two things: Better songwriting and a more positive view on life. "We're continually trying to write stronger melodies," he says. "But a lot of it comes from maturity. We start to lose our angst that alienates you from everyone else. We don't hate the world so much anymore, we wake up happy in the daytime."

It also had something to do with a jukebox filled with obnoxious dance music. "There was a bar beside the apartment [where] we were staying that played mostly classic rock and new dance music," Jackett recalls. "I did not want to listen to the dance tracks, so we played a lot of classic rock, and that influenced the record."

Ultimately, the band is just trying to stay relevant in a different record industry than they started in.

Stewart takes parting shot at fired CNN host

Sanchez gets the boot after calling Stewart a bigot on radio program

GETTY IMAGES

The Daily Show's Jon Stewart

Jon Stewart gleefully struck back Monday night at the former CNN host who was fired after calling him a bigot.

In his opening spot on The Daily Show, Stewart told his Comedy Central audience that, after taping last Thursday's edition, he had heard Rick Sanchez interviewed on a radio program.

"I think Jon Stewart's a bigot," Sanchez was heard declaring in the taped replay. Stewart replayed another excerpt from the radio interview where Sanchez sneered, "I'm so glad that (Stewart) grew up in a suburban middle-class New Jersey home with everything that you could ever imagine."

Grinning slyly, Stewart said Sanchez "really nailed what it was like growing up in central Jersey in the early '70s, the fortunate son of a single mother in the education field."

By Friday afternoon, CNN had announced Sanchez was no longer with the company.

Green marries reality TV with Internet

Control TV producer Seth Green

Control TV, which launches today, is a new reality Web series that is billing itself as a real-life Truman Show.

Like the Jim Carrey movie, Tristan Couvares will have cameras following him all day long, but with Control TV viewers voting to make Couvares' decisions.

It may sound slightly dystopic, but Seth Green, who is producing the show with Matthew Senreich, says Control TV is "part entertainment and part vicarious improvement of another human being."

"It's not Gerard Butler in Gamer, it's not The Running Man," Green says, referring to two films where lives are sacrificed for entertainment. "We're doing something a little less malicious than that."

Instead, Green sees the show as a chance for an uncertain 25-year-old man to be propelled by the Web-watching masses. In his view, the Internet can be a benevolent god.

"We're going to guide it so that none of the decisions are detrimental to him," says Green. "It could be as simple as putting him in funny clothes when he goes to a job interview or insisting that he has a hidden agenda when he speaks to a girl for the first time, or whether he's going to eat oatmeal or an English muffin to start his day."

Viewers, who can follow at http://controlTV.com and sign up for cellphone alerts, will get the opportunity to decide things for Couvares approximately 10 to 15 times a day.

Voting will be for multiple choice options — A, B or C — which means Couvares won't be forced to do anything the show's producers haven't already prepared.

Couvares, who was chosen from many applicants, will be streamed live 24 hours a day. A webisode will also run daily summarizing each day's events.

In his audition tape, Couvares said he grew up in Manchester, Conn., and moved to Los Angeles about two years ago.

"At the end of the day, if I'm in a situation, I'm going to know what makes good TV," he says. "I'm going to know what's going to be funny, what people are going to want to see. That's what I bring to the table."

Though many have experimented in streaming their lives live on the Internet, Control TV hopes the interactivity with the audience will set the show apart. There are also clear parallels to CBS' Big Brother, which also includes live webcasts and viewer multiple choice voting options for certain aspects of the show.

Seven pairs return next Sunday to compete in second season of show

Christine "Tuffy" Hough-Sweeney and Russ Courtnall are the first couple to be iced on the second season of Battle of the Blades.

The former NHL'er and figure skating champ were voted off the CBC-TV reality show after a live performance Sunday that saw them tackle a rock-music themed program.

The kitschy competition pairs former hockey heroes with female pairs skaters for live performances that are voted on by TV viewers.

The winning pair earns $100,000 that will be donated to a charity of their choice. Eliminated couples receive $25,000 for a charity of their choice.

Battle of the Blades airs live performance shows Sundays and live results shows Mondays on CBC-TV.

Skating to Hero by Chad Kroeger, Hough-Sweeney and Courtnall impressed the audience with their lifts and Courtnall's skating technique, and judges Sandra Bezic, Jeremy Roenick and Brett Hull also praised their performances.

The Russian pair Katia Gordeeva and Valeri Bure, who were also in the bottom two, will remain.

Bones Bombshell stirs things up on hit show

On-screen romance intrudes on on-again-off-again relationship between Bones's two main protagonists

IAN JOHNSTON
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Despite a martial arts background, actress Katheryn Winnick says she won't be engaging in any small screen fisticuffs with Bones star Emily Deschanel. Well, maybe not.

"No, I don't think there's a cat fight," says the Toronto-born actress, who plays the new romantic rival on the crime drama.

"Still, I feel Brennan (Deschanel) can't help but probably feel a little bit of tension at who's this new girl?"

The "new girl" is Hannah (Winnick), an Afghanistan war correspondent and girlfriend to Booth (David Boreanaz). Their romance intrudes on the on-again-off-again relationship between Booth and Brennan that has formed the basis of the long-running series.

"I don't know if she (Hannah) knows the details of their relationship and what happened last season. I think it would be more interesting to kind of discover that," says Winnick, whose credits include the films Failure To Launch and Killers.

Winnick sees some parallels between her Bones character and herself. "Being work-driven. Being ambitious. Always wanting more out of life," she says.

"I'm not one to sit around and let things happen to me. I've had the experience of starting my own martial arts school at the age of 16. I had a big career and passion before I got involved in acting."

Bones fans, needless to say, are in a bit of an uproar over the arrival of Hannah, who has been dubbed the "Bones Bombshell." They see the new character as a threat to the much-teased Booth/Brennan romance.

"My character would like to kick some butt on screen ... Hannah could definitely hold her own."
KATHERYN WINNICK

"I'd heard that it was causing a stir. I hope the audience will give Hannah a chance and realize that she's not there to be part of a love triangle or to create a cat fight or high school drama."

Still, a cat fight might be cool too.

Dexter's kill rooms return

Average room takes five hours to set up before a shoot
Will go through 25 gallons of fake blood this season

The boxes are labeled "body parts," "heads" and "Dexter killing devices & face shields." Others are filled with plastic wrap, duct tape, knives, syringes — everything your friendly neighbourhood serial killer might need to do away with bad guys.

On TV, many of these things might be found hidden in Dexter Morgan's apartment, or in the case of the body parts and heads, wrapped in plastic trash bags strewn at the bottom of the Atlantic.

In reality, though, all this stuff — along with medical equipment, official-looking paperwork from the Miami Police Department and a creepy life-sized baby that stands in for Dexter's infant son — lives inside a 48-foot trailer at a Hollywood studio where the hit Showtime series Dexter is filmed.

Now in its fifth season, Dexter follows its namesake character as he carefully balances his public life as a dad, brother and police forensic specialist with his private life as a serial killer of serial killers. The Emmy-nominated series stars Emmy-nominated actor Michael C. Hall, who has won a Golden Globe and Screen Actors Guild award for his portrayal of the enigmatic protagonist.

"He's definitely taken a unique responsibility for a shadow side that's more formidable than your average, run of the mill shadow," Hall says from his trailer between takes.

The height of the show, for fans and for Dexter, are the scenes where he's captured his victim and about to deliver his justice. He's the hero, the central character viewers are rooting for, and yet he's about to commit murder.

"Dexter is able to be most clearly himself in those scenes," says executive producer Sara Colleton. "He drops away all the masks he thinks he has to hold in place to move through society."

These moments fill just a few minutes of show time, but dozens of people spend countless hours creating each kill-room scene.

Stretch to the music

Warming up can help prevent dance injuries But warming up the mind is equally as important

IAN GORMELY
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Ask any athlete and they'll tell you that stretching is the most important exercise they do.

Just a few minutes before and after a warm-up or game can help prevent a career-ending injury.

But Tré Armstrong, one of the choreographers for So You Think You Can Dance Canada, says there are things to consider even before that.

"Never start to stretch before doing a bit of running," she cautions. "It's really important to get the blood flowing in the body. If not, your muscles might stiffen up in the cold."

Dancers put a lot of strain on their legs through lifts and jumps, so it's important to warm them up too, through a process Armstrong calls "the As, Bs and Cs," lifting each leg to a different interval, one a time. "To get the agility to jump high, you gotta get you knees high in the warm-up."

A 10-minute warm-up will do, Armstrong says, though she concedes every dancer's routine is different and individuals should find what works best for them.

Finally, the mind is also a muscle and has to be warmed up just like the rest of the body, says Armstrong. "That's something that's often overlooked. Before you do anything sit down for five minutes and scribble on a piece of paper or take out your Crackberry. It's just to clear your head. Sometimes you get into a warm-up and you start to think too much. If you get rid of it and warm up your brain you're clear to go."

Warm-up tips

SYTYCD choreographer Tre Armstrong offers three tips on what to avoid in a pre-dance warm-up.

- Don't show off. If you show off at the wrong time you could end up in re-hab for the year. Warm up for at least five minutes.
- Don't take dancing too seriously. Laugh a bit. Get ready to have some fun. Why dance if it's serious?
- Don't eat a full meal. Then you won't throw up.

Glee brings dance to mix

Song-and-dance now go hand-in-hand on Global's Glee More dancers are being integrated into the cast this season More guest stars to come

While kitschy musical numbers are still the main focus of TV's Glee, choreographer Zach Woodlee says he's been called upon more and more to churn out toe-tapping routines to go along with the tunes.

Woodlee shared his enthusiasm for the show and the art of learning to dance.

Glee airs Tuesday on Global.

How much time do you get for each episode?

The max, max, max time I get is eight hours. Like the Britney numbers — the ones with Heather like Slave 4 U and Me Against the Music — it's an eight-hour day. They get one rehearsal and then we shoot it. But then some of the numbers, especially with the cast, it's anywhere from an hour-and-a-half to four hours, depending if I can get them all. It's crazy. Literally, I think I had the kids last week for a total of four hours but they learned three numbers. So I just throw information at them and it's like, "This and this and this and this and this!" And it's kind of crazy how much they have to retain in such a small amount of time.

How are they coping with the learning curve?

They're not dancers but ... after you work with someone for a while you develop a language and you learn what each other is thinking and they know how to take in the information and translate it into their bodies and how to make it all happen. And they also know the time restraints that we're on. There is not time to sit and think about it — it's literally go, go, go, go.

Do have a favourite cast member to choreograph for?

They're all so, so different ... each one's a different beast. So, Heather (Morris, who plays Brittany) is great to choreograph for crazy, crazy dance stuff, but then if you need a nice hard earthy number, Amber (Riley, as Mercedes) is just wonderful to put something on. Naya (Rivera as Santana) is great if you need a little bit of sexy in it, you know what I mean? They each are their own little ingredient in the recipe.

And I guess Cory Monteith (as Finn) is the comic relief?

Hah. Kind of, but in turn, he's got muscle memory now, which is wonderful, and he can learn a three-minute number in two hours and remember it and not have any questions or concerns, like he's in it. He's not the best dancer in the world but he definitely knows what he's doing now and I think he also, to an extent, needs to cater to the captain of the football team dancing, you know what I mean?

Life after Prison Break

▶ Wentworth Miller

Miller focusing more on writing these days than acting ● He's written his first script, called Stoker ● But he'd be back on TV for the right role

EDWIN VAN DALEN
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

For four years, Wentworth Miller was the face of TV drama Prison Break. Today, he's starring as the new hero in the Resident Evil film franchise.

Afterlife, the latest installment in the high-octane zombie movie franchise, is the first movie role for Wentworth Miller since he rose to fame as Michael Scofield in the hit TV drama Prison Break.

His first scene in the zombie flick sees Miller's character Chris Redfield trapped inside a prison cell, something the charming actor talks about with a smile on his face.

"In an interesting way, this is an evolution of the character I played in Prison Break," Miller says. "If you know me from the show, I think you'll watch the movie and see a degree of overlap. I found it funny when I first read the script. For those who know me from Prison Break they would be amused. But if you don't know me from the show, then it's business as usual."

But there's no tattoo this time. "I will always be Michael Scofield to certain people."

Ever since Prison Break ended in 2009, film scripts have been arriving on Miller's doorstep in abundance, with many of them on the theme of prison.

"Whether my character is in prison, going to prison or he's been to prison – or if he's got a tattoo – maybe he can make origami like Michael Scofield," he says.

"Typecasting is very real and it's something to be reckoned with as an actor. Coming off four years of a show playing the same character, you're going to be that person. Not just to fans, but also to the business, to Hollywood."

But Miller quickly decided he wouldn't be bothered with that.

Why then, from all those scripts that he got, did Miller choose to star in the fourth installment of the Resident Evil franchise? "Because it made me laugh," he responds. But also because he knew that that franchise was "intensely popular," he said. "The franchise has its place in popular culture and I was aware of its significant international fan base."

Top 5 vampire flicks to watch

▶ Shadow of the Vampire.

These are dangerous woods to venture into, for sure. Choosing the five best vampire movies is sure to stir the ire of the multitude of fans of the genre, people who are proprietary about this romantic, fearsome figure.

But with the opening this week of Let Me In, it's as good a time as any to sink our teeth into the topic. (Sorry, the puns are just too easy.)

These are five we like best, in no particular order. You will notice that none of them includes the word Twilight in the title (continued below):

1

Let the Right One In (2008): We may as well begin with the Swedish thriller that inspired Let Me In, a film that was rightly hailed for its inventiveness, scares and soul. Director Tomas Alfredson offers plenty of startling scenes, but the real allure comes from the suspense that builds in the stillness, and the sweetness that arises from these two misfit characters forging a relationship they both desperately need, even though they know it can't last.

Nosferatu (1922): As far as classics go, it's hard to choose between this and the Bela Lugosi Dracula from 1931. Lugosi is, of course, synonymous with the character. But Max Schreck frightens me more.

Maybe it's the flickering, black-and-white cinematography, or the off-kilter shadows and camera angles. But decades later, the vision of the lanky Schreck rising from a coffin or walking through a doorway with that haunting look in his eyes is still creepy as hell.

3

Shadow of the Vampire (2000): Barely anyone saw this movie, which is a shame because it was wonderfully clever, funny and disturbing. The premise from director E. Elias Merhige and writer Steven Katz was that, in making Nosferatu, Murnau knowingly hired a real vampire as the star to make its frightening moments more realistic. As the driven director, John Malkovich provided an incisive exploration of the lengths to which a filmmaker will go for art.

4

The Lost Boys (1987): Robert Pattinson was an infant when this came out, nowhere close to playing the swoony, sparkly Edward of the Twilight series. But back then, Joel Schumacher's film defined the vampire as teenage rebel. And this is very much a Schumacher film, for better and for worse: It's got the hot young cast of Jason Patric, Kiefer Sutherland, Jami Gertz and not one but two Coreys, Haim and Feldman. If you grew up in the '80s, this was an exciting, sexy movie.

5

Love at First Bite (1979): A disco-riffic spoof of the seductive side of Dracula. George Hamilton has never been as pasty or as funny as he was here, playing the deadly serious and hopelessly romantic count. Forced out of his Transylvania castle, he moves to New York City to pursue the model (Susan Saint James) he adores from afar. Arte Johnson is a hoot as his sniveling sidekick, Renfield. This one's dated, but deserves eternal life.

Exorcist Blu-ray

Besides having both the 1973 theatrical cut of the film and Freidken's director's cut from 2000, the new Blu-ray also includes a ton of behind-the-scenes footage cinematographer Owen Roizman had been holding onto since the original production.

- Blair on the Blu-ray: What I most appreciate about the behind-the-scenes features is the innocence. We tried to always say this is who I was, but nobody wanted to believe it. And the audience gets to finally see it for themselves, that I was just this normal little young person."
- Blair on being a child actor: I was naïve, but I was a professional child actor, so you do what you're told to do. It doesn't mean you understand everything.

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

The Exorcist is easily one of the greatest horror movies of all time, but could they make it again today?

"No you can't because they created everything they did," the film's star, Linda Blair, says, citing the 1973 film's practical effects. "I always say it's the greatest magic show ever made on film. With the computers and so on nowadays, nobody would believe it — in my opinion."

Still, that doesn't mean she wouldn't prefer working with today's technical wizardry. "I think it would've been swell if there were some of the special effects we have available to us nowadays," she says.

Blair was barely a teenager when she embarked on the nearly two-year process of making William Friedkin's groundbreaking supernatural thriller, which gets the Blu-ray treatment with a new deluxe edition.

"Billy Friedkin is a master. Without a doubt, he was meant to make this film," she says. "He is difficult because he wants to deliver the best. And that's why the film has withstood time. Yes, it was hard. There's no doubt. It was no walk in the park."

And despite her age, Blair says she knew all the hard work was worth it as soon as she saw the finished product.

"To see all of it put together, it was incredible. I knew that my life had changed forever, I just didn't know how," she says. "It was when I became known around the world that my life became nearly impossible, and I just kept fighting to say no, you're not going to take away my identity."

Of course, after almost 40 years, things have gotten a little easier to handle. "I think that people have come to understand that I'm rather boring," she says. "To an obsessive fan, I'm pretty normal."

Given the chance to look back on The Exorcist, Blair is particularly struck by the reaction she and the film received — and how often she was quizzed on theology, with a recurring question being whether the devil exists.

"I was sitting in front of huge amounts of press and that was one of the main questions to a 15-year-old. It was very bizarre," says Blair, who was raised Protestant. "They would truly ask me, as adults, if there's God, if there's the Devil."

Feldman returns to vampire franchise

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Mention the Twilight series to Corey Feldman and he'll feign ignorance. "Never heard of it," he says, brow furrowed under shaggy black hair. "I have no idea what you're talking about. Is that a comic book or a kids' cartoon?" Then the laugh comes. "Just joking."

With his own new vampire movie coming out, Lost Boys: the Thirst, Feldman recognizes the importance of that other bloodsucking franchise.

"What I say is let them keep making movies because it's keeping us in business," he says. "The more romance novelists there are out there making romanticized ideas of vampirism for the kids, the more people want to see a real action movie putting the bad guys where they belong."

He's also more than a little protective of the legacy of the first Lost Boys film, especially with the genre's current resurgence. "I remember it really being hailed as the original rock-and-roll vampire movie," he says.

"I'll never forget being at the premiere where I had invited Sam Kinison. I really wanted to gauge his perception of it because he was so contemporary and cutting edge at the time — he really had his finger on the pulse of what was happening. So he was sitting right in front of me at the premiere, and he kept screaming during the whole movie, like, 'Dude! This movie rocks! F--- yeah!'"

The Thirst marks Feldman's third Lost Boys film, after Joel Schumacher's 1987 original, which featured Feldman and Jamison Newlander as teenage self-professed vampire hunters the Frog brothers, and the 2008 sequel, Lost Boys: the Tribe.

FREDERICK M. BROWN/GETTY IMAGES

"It felt good and it still feels good," Feldman says of reuniting with Newlander. "It's kind of like re-engaging in an old marriage. It's awkward, it's uncomfortable, but something about it still works. And then you feel kind of guilty afterward, like, 'Did I really mean to do that?'"

The new film is also the Frog brothers' chance to take centre stage, though Feldman's character isn't in the best of shape. "He's disheveled, disabled, abandoned and alone," he explains. "He's living in a trailer, he's lost everything in his life that's dear to him, and he's really disconnected from the rest of the world.

That's where we find him at the beginning of this film. It's not too difficult to relate to for Feldman, who's had his own ups and downs in the past 23 years, including the loss last year of best friend and Lost Boys co-star Corey Haim.

But Feldman is looking forward, not back — as is the franchise, he insists. "We wanted to make sure that we keep it contemporary," he says.

"(In the Tribe) we had the X factor. They were all about extreme sports and motorcycles and skateboards and surfboards and YouTube and Girls Gone Wild and cell phones and video cameras.

"Whereas now it's really more about the ravers and designer drugs and laser shows and all that kind of stuff that kids can really relate with today. That's what we think the vampires would be doing if they were turning into vampires today."

Twitter leads art-less masses: John Mayer

John Mayer is finally addressing why he walked away from his 3.2 million followers on Twitter by deleting his account last month. "It occurred to me that since the invocation of Twitter, nobody who has participated in it has created any lasting art. And yes! Yours truly is included in that roundup as well," Mayer writes in a blog post. "No artwork created by someone with a healthy grasp of social media thus far has proven to be anything other than disposable." He also says he resents the way celebrities use the site. "When you convert your art into the art of real-time brand management, I suddenly have no more interest in it," he writes. "I'm not a brand." METRO

Jolie's kids go where she goes

It's back-to-school time, and since Angelina Jolie is currently directing a movie in Hungary, that's where her kids will go to school, according to People magazine. "Angelina has enlisted her children into (an) elite French-American school that (Pax and Maddox) will attend from next week on," a source says. "The school has kindergarten, too, where Zahara and Shiloh will attend." METRO

Newsflash: Bieber's rich

MONEY, MONEY, MONEY. Justin Bieber is by far the highest-paid teen performer, earning a reported $300,000 a night while on tour, according to the Smoking Gun. Not only does he make three times what Disney teen star Selena Gomez earns, he also out-earns established acts like Sheryl Crow and Weezer, who pull in $146,500 and $150,000 per night, respectively. But Bieber still trails top-earning Rascall Flats. The country act makes $702,500 a night. METRO

Gaga for safety

Flight attendants for a low-cost Philippine airline who dance to Lady Gaga to keep passengers from snoozing through an in-flight safety demonstration are the latest YouTube sensation.

A video of stewardesses performing a choreographed routine aboard a Cebu Pacific flight last week to demonstrate safety procedures has received more than 6.5 million hits.

The Manila-based airline, said yesterday it resorted to dancing stewardesses to draw more passenger attention to its in-flight safety reminders.

▶ The Cadillac Ranch is a must see if you are in Amarillo, Texas.

Go to the heart of Texas with a trip to Amarillo ◐ The people love God, meat, their horses and Humvees ◐ Oddball art is all over the city that's in a state better known for oil and gas

SEE
The Signs

Amarillo, Texas, is on oddball place, but perhaps it's King Oddball is Stanley Marsh III — heir to an oil and gas fortune and madcap artist. He has erected scores of mock traffic signs with slogans like "Road Does Not End." Funny and strangely affecting.

HEAR
The Humvees of Repent Amarillo

Repent Amarillo is the scarily militarised faction of the Army of God and their camouflaged Humvees seem to be everywhere.

List of hates includes rock 'n' roll, gays, students, environmentalism, planned parenting … be afraid, be very, very afraid.

EAT
Sharky's

Sharky's Burrito Co, in 1612 S Georgia St., is fast becoming legendary. It serves simply huge, delicious burritos for a few dollars. Whatever your budget this is not to be missed.

DRINK
The blood of Christ

Only half joking — this place is very religious. There are chapels everywhere, traditional and modern — one of them has a "blood" pouring down the frontage and the slogan "His blood was spilled for you." Thanks but I've just eaten.

WEAR
A cowboy hat

They love horses in Amarillo and there are many ranches you can visit to see, well, real ranchers. A cowboy hat, check shirt and denim is de rigeur.

Iconic piece of '70s pop-art courtesy of that man Stanley Marsh again. Essentially 10 Cadillacs buried nose down in the dirt in a field just outside of town. It's very, very surreal. You can play on them too!

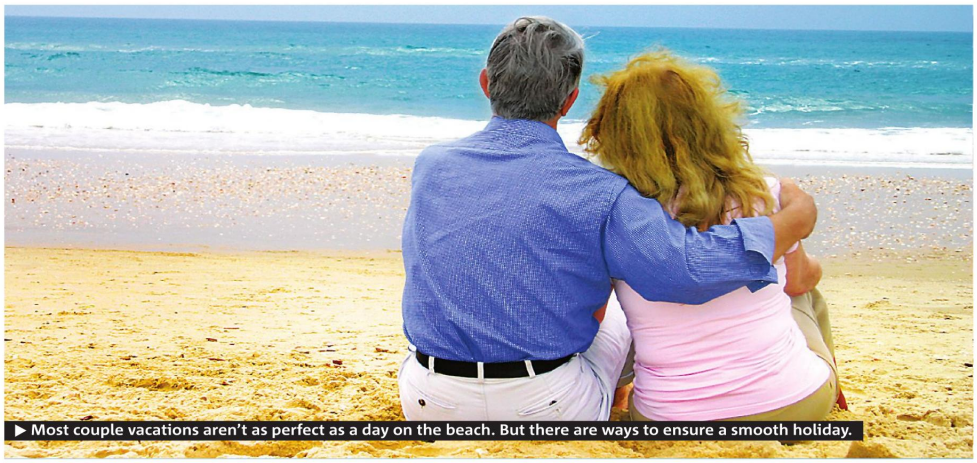
Travelling together hassle free

REB STEVENSON
TRAVEL GURU,
2FORCOUPLES.COM



▶ Most couple vacations aren't as perfect as a day on the beach. But there are ways to ensure a smooth holiday.

I know what you're thinking as you peruse that glossy new guidebook: sunset strolls by the Seine, slow motion high-fives on Machu Picchu, steamy lovemaking on a secluded beach in Thailand where the sand doesn't get in the way.

What you're leaving out: non-existent street signs, less-than-aromatic local public transit and disappearing reservations. And — oh God — that hellish reservoir of sweat that develops between your back and a knapsack on a hot day. Blech.

The thing is, real travel is much more like The Amazing Race than a Sandals ad. Between jet lag fatigue, gnawing hunger and incomprehensible shower dials, there are so many frustrations that you just never encounter in your everyday life. And whose fault is it that the little out-of-the-way gelateria you just spent two hours trying to find is closed for renovations? Your partner's, of course! Don't believe what lawyers tell you: The map is the original divorce paper.

The good news is that travelling as a twosome isn't completely impossible. You can curtail the squabbles if you lower your expectations, only fly first class (yeah, right) and consider the tips below.

- Blowin' in the wind means relationship turbulence. There is nothing romantic about wasting tragic amounts of time searching for basics like hotels and food. Book as much as you can in advance.
- That said, leave lots of gaps within that structure for spur-of-the-moment activities. Do not make a minute-by-minute itinerary and take on the role of drill sergeant. (Unless it's a sexy drill sergeant.)
- You might have Google Maps installed on your iPhone, but if your partner (wrongly) insists that "it's that way," shut up and enjoy the scenic route.
- The Parisian "cigarette and coffee" breakfast? Mon dieu, non! When blood sugar drops, so does the sweetness between you and your beloved. Eat regular meals and acquaint yourself with the entire tasty line of PowerBars.
- Of course you love him dearly. It's all bliss and joy and snuggles. But he's driving you effing nuts, right? Since most couples don't spend 24-7 together, it's natural to want some space. Don't feel guilty about sending him to a sporting event while you go shopping.
- Constant sightseeing yields total travel burnout. On long trips, take a vacation from the vacation by having an average date and concentrating on each other — get a room with a kitchen and cook dinner or see a movie.
- It's okay to think museums are boring. Who wants to look at ancient ceramics in glass cases every day? Nobody. Who wants to sleep in and have some dirty vacation sex instead? Everybody. Maybe you can even find that secluded beach after all.

Excitement a plenty in Montreal

Looking for fun? Than head to the river Get a 'scenic' tour and enjoy a wet, wild ride on the Lachine Rapids

THE TRAVELIN' CANADIAN

DARREN PARKMAN
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Montreal … a city of culture, jazz, history, and … bone chilling rapids!

When you're not enjoying all that cultural and history, high adventure is only as far away as the port of old Montreal on the St. Laurence River.

Forget white water rafting, high-speed jet boating on the Lachine Rapids is one of the fastest, bumpiest, wettest, wildest rides you'll ever experience. Imagine hitting a 20 foot high wall of water, coming up for a few seconds of air and then doing it all over again … and again!

Saute Moutons tours offers a one hour thrill ride that will leave your heart in your throat, while your trying not to swallow gallons of river water. When it comes to riding the rapids, I'd rate this experience a ten!

The moment you hit those Lachine rapids, it really does feel like boat's about to capsize, even though a safety bar ensures than can't happen. Yes, you'll get soaked to the bone, but it's a lot more exciting than your typical amusement park roller-coaster. Thankfully, the $65 fee includes the rental of a full head to toe wet suit, and believe me, it comes in handy.

The adventure is billed as a scenic city tour, but you soon forget about the pretty buildings, when those rapids hit. To be honest, I didn't see a lot during the rapids part of the tour. Too busy trying to get the water out of eyes, ears, and mouth.

My kinda fun!

Other cool things to do in Montreal

Stroll through Old Montreal: You'd swear you were in old Europe with all the cobblestone streets, old cafes, and 17th and 18th century architecture. You won't find this kind of old world charm and character anywhere else in North America.

Hike to the top of Mount Royal: A brisk walk up a series of staircases to the summit will reveal the most amazing view of the city. In winter there is even a special path to cross-country ski to the top. Every Sunday you can check out the Tam Tam Jam music festival in the park at the base of Mount Royal.

Canonization of Brother Andre a boon to tourism
City holding special events last half of October

Having a newly minted saint in town isn't just good news for Montreal's faithful — it will also likely bring a few hallelujahs from the city's travel industry.

The canonization of Brother Andre by Pope Benedict on Oct. 17 will not only spur some special events in Montreal but will also have long-lasting effects on the marketing of the city as a religious tourism destination, observers say.

"Once somebody is canonized, that really shoots it through the roof," says Kevin J. Wright, president of the World Religious Travel Association, which is holding its annual trade show in Montreal in November. Wright said besides all the media attention Montreal will get because of the canonization, the papal nod to one of its local sons will be an incentive for faith-based tour operators to push Montreal itineraries in their packages.

Two weeks of special events have been planned by the Roman Catholic archdiocese in Montreal to mark the canonization, which will take place at the Vatican in Rome.

An all-night prayer vigil will be held in the Crypt Church of Montreal's St. Joseph's Oratory during the night of Oct. 16-17, with the canonization being shown live from Rome on a big-screen TV in the Oratory's Crypt Church beginning at 4 a.m.

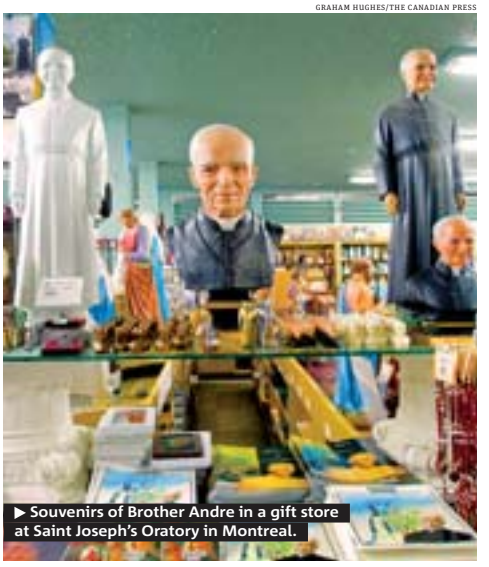
There will be a new exhibit on Brother Andre at the Oratory Museum as well as concerts, masses and a carillon recital on Oct. 17 at the Oratory and Notre-Dame Basilica.

Special events will also be held at the end of the month, capped by an open house at various religious sites in Montreal on Oct. 30-31 and Thanksgiving mass at Olympic Stadium on Oct. 30.

Montreal and the province of Quebec have long been known as a good bet for religious travellers — and those visitors who were less pious.

"This is the first time I was ever in a city where you couldn't throw a brick without breaking a church window," remarked U.S. literary icon Mark Twain during a visit to the city decades ago.

GRAHAM HUGHES/THE CANADIAN PRESS



▶ Souvenirs of Brother Andre in a gift store at Saint Joseph's Oratory in Montreal.

GRAHAM HUGHES/THE CANADIAN PRESS

However, he wasn't far off in his evaluation. Some of North America's most spectacular religious architecture sprang from Quebec's deep Roman Catholic roots. Even as the influence of the Catholic Church has waned in the province, Montreal is still dominated by another attraction, the glowing cross atop Mont-Royal.

Religious tourism globally is estimated to be an $18-billion-a-year industry by Wright, whose organization deals with all aspects of the faith-based tourism business.

He describes Montreal as one of the "great destinations," although he says it isn't as well known as some others. "Most of us, when we think of religious travel, especially if we're from North America, we tend to think of places such as the Middle East, we think of Europe and not so much North America.

"But of all the places in North America, Quebec has a number of shrines, pilgrimage sites, that are actually on a world-class level." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Take a trip to a cemetery

Rochester, N.Y., is home to America's oldest municipal park-garden graveyard Visit for the history, stay for the serene beauty

Atop an oak-shaded hill at Mount Hope Cemetery, an epitaph chiselled in Latin on Col. Nathaniel Rochester's headstone whispers on the wind: "If you seek his monument, look around you."

Mount Hope, America's oldest municipal park-garden graveyard, is a refuge not only for the departed. Curious souls still tramp through the 78-hectare arboretum by the tens of thousands each year, among them picnickers, bird watchers, joggers and history buffs.

In the Romantic era of Wordsworth and Beethoven, the Victorian vogue of mourning embraced a love of nature and artistry. So-called "rural cemeteries" a few kilometres out of town were a sublime departure from the austere colonial churchyards with morbid funerary where the dead typically ended up.

Some 200 were established in the three decades before the Civil War, beginning with Mount Auburn near Boston in 1831. They're invariably hemmed in now by urban sprawl, forerunners of large-scale city parks and the grid-pattern cemeteries that predominate to this day.

Carved out of wilderness on New York's western frontier in 1838, Mount Hope's heavily wooded Old Grounds are a jumble of glacier-carved ridges, ravines and meadows.

Cobbled carriage paths twist and tumble past Greek-style mausoleums, a Florentine fountain and a Gothic Revival chapel, stone terraces fringed with wildflowers, and ornate bronze, marble and granite sculptures of pet dogs, winged angels and Celtic crosses.

And don't forget the permanent residents — 350,000 at last count, and growing by 300 or so each year.

Among the best-known: Civil rights crusader Frederick Douglass, suffragist Susan B. Anthony, anthropology pioneer Lewis Henry Morgan, and William Warfield, fondly eulogized in 2002 for his gravelly rendition of Ol' Man River in the musical Show Boat.

Succulent holiday pork

Not too many supermarkets carry the choicest cuts of pork
For Thanksgiving, it's worth it

Crown pork roast is the juiciest, most succulent cut of pork. The roast comes from the rib portion of the loin, which is considered the tenderest of sections.

Shoppers who want to cook it for a special feast should order it from a local butcher shop, supermarket or farmers market well in advance as the crowns have to be specially prepared.

Sometimes the purveyors will include paper frills with the roast that you can use to dress the tips of the bones after cooking and before serving to give it a truly elegant presentation and wow your family and guests this Thanksgiving. Recipe is below.

Crown Roast of Pork

Preparation:

Ingredients :

- 1 crown roast of pork (about 4.5 kg/10 lb)
- 250 ml (1 cup) diced dried apricots
- 250 ml (1 cup) Grand Marnier liqueur
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) butter
- 250 ml (1 cup) chopped celery
- 1 medium onion, chopped
- 1 pkg (227 g/8 oz) herb seasoned stuffing mix
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) slivered almonds
- 250 ml (1 cup) chicken broth
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) dried thyme
- Salt and pepper, to taste

1 In a small saucepan, heat apricots and Grand Marnier to boiling. Remove from heat; set aside. In a large skillet over medium heat, melt butter. Add celery and onion; saute for 5 to 10 minutes. Transfer to a large mixing bowl. Add stuffing mix, apricots with Grand Marnier and almonds. Stir to combine. Heat broth to boiling. Pour over stuffing mixture. Add thyme, salt and pepper. Stir to combine.

2 Fill cavity of pork roast with large foil ball. Place roast in a roasting pan, bones pointing up. Cover bone tips with small pieces of foil to prevent burning. Roast uncovered in a 160 C (325 F) oven for 2 1/2 hours, basting occasionally with pan juices. Remove roast from oven. Drain off any excess fat.

3 Remove foil ball and fill cavity with stuffing. Cover stuffing with a small piece of foil to prevent drying. (Alternatively, place stuffing in a baking dish and cook in oven with roast.) Roast for another 1 1/2 hours or until meat thermometer reaches 68 to 70 C (155 to 160 F). Place roast on a carving board and allow to rest for 10 minutes. Slice between ribs to serve. Makes 12 to 14 servings.

Prepare for some polenta

Polenta lasagna is easy and delicious for harried weekends

For most people, the only time lasagna lands on the weeknight table is when they prepare it ahead during the weekend. Or when it came out of a box.

Even the no-boil noodles usually are too much trouble for Monday-through-Friday cooking. That's why I like to use prepared polenta (the sort sold in shelf-stable tubes). Using polenta instead of noodles not only is faster and easier, but it also produces a heartier meal.

Because the polenta is already cooked and only needs heating, all you have to do to assemble the lasagna is slice the polenta, layer it with cheese, sauce and whatever else motivates you, then pop it in the oven.

The sauce is just jarred pasta sauce doctored with chopped Italian-style chicken sausage. But you could easily add whatever you like, as well as add additional layers of vegetables, including thinly sliced onions, peppers, mushrooms, even roasted slices of eggplant.

Just be aware that the more you add and the deeper you make the lasagna, the longer it will take to cook.

Ingredients :

- 2 tubes (each 510 g/18 oz) prepared polenta
- 250 ml (1 cup) ricotta cheese
- 500 ml (2 cups) grated mozzarella cheese (divided)
- 5 ml (1 tsp) garlic powder
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) ground black pepper
- 1 egg
- 375 ml (1 1/2 cups) jarred pasta sauce
- 170 g (6 oz) Italian-style cooked chicken sausages, finely chopped
- 50 ml (1/4 cup) grated Parmesan cheese

▶ Polenta lasagna.

Quick Polenta Lasagna Preparation:

1. Heat oven to 200 C (400 F). Coat a 2-l (8 cup) casserole dish with cooking spray.
2. Slice each tube of polenta into 9 rounds. Arrange 9 rounds in a single layer over the bottom of the baking dish. Set aside.
3. In a medium bowl, mix together ricotta cheese, 250 ml (1 cup) of the mozzarella, garlic powder, pepper and egg. Spread mixture in an even layer over polenta.
4. In a small bowl, mix together pasta sauce and chopped sausage. Spread half of the mixture over cheese. Arrange remaining 9 rounds of polenta in a single layer over sauce, then top with remaining sauce.
5. Sprinkle Parmesan cheese and remaining 250 ml (1 cup) of mozzarella over sauce. Spray a sheet of foil with cooking spray, then use it to cover lasagna and bake for 20 minutes. Remove foil and bake for another 15 minutes, or until cheese is lightly browned. Let stand for 5 minutes.

Success of sustainability depends on the bottom line

FLICKR: VAXOMATIC

Turn risk into opportunity with sound business strategy

As Canadians become more environmentally conscious and demand green products and services, many companies are looking for ways to reduce their environmental footprint. But to be successful, sustainability and profitability must be interlinked.

"For sustainability to be effective and lasting in the corporate environment, it must create economic benefits in concert with environmental benefits," says Tyler Elm, vice president of sustainability for Canadian Tire. "Our goal at Canadian Tire is to implement sustainable practices that advance the business while benefiting our customers and the environment."

According to a recent Economist Intelligence Unit survey, just 24 per cent of executives believe there is a strong link between financial performance and commitment to sustainability in the short-term (one to two years), with 69 per cent seeing opportunity over the long-term (five to 10 years). That said, savvy companies can make short-terms gains on their long-term sustainability strategies.

According to Elm this may be a result of executives having only a partial understanding the opportunity of sustainability. He notes that, "for business, sustainability issues may be used to drive innovation, creating significant benefits for the bottom line and the environment. Best practice is to go after basic eco-efficiency first — stuff that reduces costs and greenhouse gas emissions almost immediately — before going after opportunities to grow sales or market share from things such as more sustainable products."

For example, Canadian Tire has reduced its carbon footprint and energy costs by equipping approximately 200 stores nationwide with Central Energy Management (CEM) technology. The CEM system controls the store's energy consumption and reports inefficiencies. The energy saved in the converted stores will reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 7629 metric tonnes — the equivalent of removing 1149 cars from the road per year — and will save the company approximately $3.4 million on energy costs every year.

"For sustainability to be effective and lasting in the corporate environment, it must create economic benefits in concert with environmental benefits." TYLER ELM

Another one of Canadian Tire's strategies to maximize profitability while maintaining an environmentally sound business model is to source and sell innovative products, like its new line of Blue Planet car mats. Used tires are collected, processed, and transformed into car floor mats, extending the life cycle of one of Canadian landfills' most notorious inhabitants. "One pair of car mats removes one tire from landfills, so it's truly a win-win for the environment and the economy," notes Elm. "We bring our stewardship full circle, with the end result being a quality product."

It's possible for corporations to implement environmentally sustainable business practices without sacrificing bottom line profits. With proper financial planning and sound business strategies, sustainability can be good for business as well as the environment. NEWS CANADA

SO, WHAT'S THE DAMAGE?

Workplace Law

DANIEL LUBLIN
IS AN EMPLOYMENT LAWYER WITH WHITTEN & LUBLIN LLP.
DAN@CANADAEMPLOYMENTLAWYER.COM

It is one of the most important concepts in workplace law — or at least it was. Since 2008, when the Supreme Court presented Canadian workplaces with the Keays decision, employers have played legal hardball with relative impunity. Trumped-up allegations of employee misconduct, bogus reasons for dismissal, malicious references or frivolous defences may be improper conduct, but without an employee's actual economic losses, courts have been unable to intervene. Before Keays, employers had an obligation to play nice and behave well at the time of dismissal, or face paying additional "bad faith" damages to a former employee. But, following that case employers went from strength to strength. A recent Alberta Court of Appeal decision illustrates why.

When Calgary stock broker Kurt Soost was fired from Merrill Lynch for allegedly breaking the brokerage's rules, he didn't go quietly. Believing that his dismissal was deliberately timed in order to seize his clientele, Soost sued claiming wrongful dismissal and additional damages based on a loss of goodwill, stemming from the fact that the manner of his dismissal cost him most of his book of business.

In 2009, a trial judge awarded Soost a year's salary plus an additional $1.6 million because the manner of his dismissal affected his ability to retain his clients and cost him his book of business.

However, the Court of Appeal recently struck part of that award down in a decision that has many employees shaking their heads. The ruling pointed out that Merrill Lynch was allowed to terminate Soost and that its only mistake was failing to provide him with a fair warning. Since the loss of his clients stemmed from the loss of his job, in awarding Soost a year's pay, he was fairly compensated, according to the Court. What does this decision mean for Canadian workplaces? Employees should not add zeros to their lawsuits based on the fact they were fired. Rather, evidence of some extraordinary harm caused by the manner of dismissal must be present. Further, employers, who had feared financial sanction for mishandling terminations, need no longer be so deterred. According to Alberta's Court of Appeal, this would create a "slacker's charter," whether right or wrong.

Make every penny count

Funding post-secondary education is an achievable goal for your children

Parents can find it difficult to save for their child's post-secondary education. The simple costs of everyday life — from grocery bills to rent — are always at the top of the list. Yet saving for a child's education remains a worthwhile investment.

After all, a post-secondary education opens doors to better job opportunities.

To help modest income families lower the cost of saving for a post-secondary education the federal government offers the Canada Learning Bond.

Parents that qualify for the National Child Benefit can receive the $500 Canada Learning Bond. Deposited in an RESP — Registered Education Savings Plan, interest on the bond grows for each child born after Dec. 31, 2003 tax-free until withdrawn for your child's post-secondary education.

A post-secondary education opens doors for young people.

With the Canada Learning Bond, your child can get an extra $100 per year as long as you continue to receive the National Child Benefit Supplement. By the time a child turns 15, the money could total as much as $2,000 in an RESP. The government will even give parents an extra $25 to cover the cost of opening an RESP.

There are a few steps to take to apply. The best way to get started is to contact the government toll free for more information, by calling 1 800 O-Canada, visiting your nearest Service Canada Centre or going online at CanLearn.ca.

RESP recipe

Federal government education savings incentives:

- Instructions: For every child in a household, take a dollar a day and invest it into an RESP - Registered Education Savings Plan. Do the same every year between now and the time a child goes to trade school, college or university. Let the money sit in the RESP and watch it grow. In fact, the more money is added and the longer it sits there, the bigger it will get. If families can only afford 50 cents a day, simply halve the recipe. Everything adds up over time.
- Icing on the RESP: For every dollar that is put into a child's RESP, the government will add between 20 and 40 cents in Canada Education Savings Grant money, depending on the family's income and the amount that is contributed annually. If a family has a limited income, and is receiving the National Child Benefit Supplement for their eligible child born after Dec. 31, 2003 they could also receive $500 in the form of the Canada Learning Bond as well as additional money in years to come.
- Substitutions: Although there are many other savings vehicles out there (such as Tax Free Savings Accounts or the old-fashioned cookie jar), it is worth remembering that an RESP is the only plan where the government offers money to help families save—from 20 to 40 per cent—based on what you contribute and your net family income.
- Serving Instructions: Serve with encouragement and support for a lifetime full of possibilities. Further instructions can be found online at CanLearn.ca.

A SPECIAL REPORT PRESENTED BY ING DIRECT

JOIN THE MONEY MOVEMENT:

Managing your hard earned savings can be simple

"As an advocate for Savers, at ING DIRECT we believe people can enhance their savings by having a plan and sticking to it. Following are a few simple principles to help you along your savings journey."
~ Peter Aceto, President & CEO at ING DIRECT

While a lot of people focus their efforts on trying to make more money, doing that isn't easy. That's why I'd like to talk about making better decisions with the money you already have. There are five simple rules I feel are crucial to effectively managing your money:

1. Understand where your money goes.

2. Buy with cash, not credit.

3. Pay off your mortgage and other debts fast.

4. Succeed at investing by starting early and sticking with your plan.

5. Find new ways to reuse items that will help your wallet and the environment.

Making the most of your money is easier than you think. Only buy things you need and don't go shopping for "something to do." I can't stress those two points enough. And for things you're going to use infrequently, borrow them from somebody or rent them.

Having savings is key. People always think of food, shelter and clothing as the basic needs, but savings should also be included. We might not plan for an unexpected car repair or a last minute decision to visit a friend that lives across the country. Wouldn't it be great to be financially prepared for these events?

By taking these few simple steps, you will keep a few dollars in your pocket, and be prepared for those unexpected surprises.

To find out more about ING DIRECTs Money Movement, check out our Facebook fanpage (facebook.com/SuperStarSaver) or our Twitter page (twitter.com/SuperStarSaver).
You can also drop into the ING DIRECT Save Your Money Café at 466 Howe Street.

Smooth sailing for traveling families

Vacations take planning and patience Learn about your destination

Travel was once considered a privilege for the wealthy. Yet over the years, it has become easier and less costly to visit places near and far, and more Canadians are taking the plunge and traveling with their children.

While it can be exhilarating to experience new cultures, customs and cuisines, it can also be overwhelming for parents to be in a new place with young children.

Author and parenting expert Kathy Buckworth is no stranger to traveling with kids, and notes that it's important to prepare your family for what to expect before you board the flight or hit the road.

▶ More Canadians are taking the plunge and traveling with their children.

"No matter what kind of trip you are taking, whether it's an international flight or just a drive across the province to visit the grandparents, family vacations take a lot of planning and patience.

"One of the key things I recommend is to take the time to learn about the place you are going to before you get there. Leapfrog's Tag Reading System is the ideal solution for such an exercise, with math and logic puzzles, and a new interactive World Map that introduces geography and social sciences.

"The Tag Reading System is bound to invite interesting conversations and ensure everyone gets the most out of their time away from home."

▶ Manny Malhotra, who comes to Vancouver after playing last season with the Sharks, will be the third-line centre this year. He is a hit with Vancouver's Indo-Canadian community, which listens to games broadcast in Punjabi on an ethnic station.

Will more 'bite' be good for Canucks?

New additions are among the reasons expectations are high in Vancouver

There's improved mobility on defence and what coach Alain Vigneault calls more bite up front.

So can the Vancouver Canucks chomp deeper into the playoffs and celebrate their 40th NHL season with a first Stanley Cup?

"We feel we're good enough to go all the way but I think there's 20-25 teams that feel the same way," said Henrik Sedin, the club's first league MVP and scoring champion.

Expectations are soaring in the city where Lord Stanley's statue, pleading arms uplifted to the heavens, graces the landmark park named for him.

The Canucks followed a second straight Northwest Division title by bolstering their blue-line with 27-year-old Dan Hamhuis through free agency and trading for Keith Ballard.

"I think with bringing in myself and Manny, guys are just going to buy in."

RAFFI TORRES, WHEN ASKED IF THE CANUCKS WILL BE TOUGHER.

General manager Mike Gillis also added a helping of grit in forwards Manny Malhotra, 30, and Raffi Torres, 28.

"It changes our look," Vigneault said.

"We've got a big body in Manny Malhotra who's very good on draws and real good defensively.

"Raffi Torres brings us a lot of energy and a physical presence and (he's) harder on the forecheck so I think that's going to change our identity a little bit up front.

"We'll have a little bit more bite with the addition of those two guys."

Vancouver's defensive toughness was exposed in the playoffs when Vancouver lost a six-game second-round series to Stanley Cup champion Chicago for the second consecutive year.

Hamhuis and Ballard replace defenceman Willie Mitchell, not re-signed after a Jan. 16 concussion, and Sami Salo, out with a torn Achilles tendon.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Trade

- The Canucks acquired defenceman Ryan Parent and forward Jonas Andersson from the Nashville Predators for defenceman Shane O'Brien and forward Dan Gendur yesterday.
- Parent, 23, had a goal and two assists in 48 games last season with the Philadelphia Flyers. Andersson, 29, had seven goals and 13 assists in 30 games last year in the KHL.

Long wait over for Halladay

REDS | PHILLIES

▶ Time: Today, 2 p.m.
Channel: SNET

Roy Halladay spent plenty of Octobers at home, wishing for this opportunity.

The ace right-hander has been to seven all-star games, won a Cy Young Award, pitched a perfect game and compiled an impressive resume over his 13-year career.

But the one thing he hasn't crossed off his to-do list is pitch in a post-season game.

Until now.

Halladay will take the ball when the Philadelphia Phillies host the Cincinnati Reds in Game 1 of their NL division series today.

"It's definitely something I'm looking forward to," Halladay said yesterday. "It's a great challenge. It's something I've wanted to do my whole career, and I'm very grateful for the opportunity."

Edinson Volquez will start for the NL Central champion Reds, who are in the playoffs for the first time since 1995. Volquez came back from right elbow surgery and went 4-3 with a 4.31 ERA in 12 starts.

"For me, it's something really big," he said. "I was out for one year and came back from Tommy John surgery. This is the first game of the playoffs. It's something big. Really big."

On almost every other staff, Halladay would've been an obvious choice to start the series opener. But the Phillies also have Roy Oswalt and Cole Hamels. Oswalt is starting Game 2 on Friday and Hamels will pitch in Game 3 on Sunday.

HANDOUT

▶ Ford will offer both a four-door sedan and five-door hatchback when the 2011 Fiesta is introduced next summer.

Ford banking on Fiesta to kick-off the party

LORNE DRURY
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

"Small cars are our largest opportunity for growth."
MARK FIELDS, PRESIDENT FORD AMERICAS

Instead of looking to bigger cars, Ford is going smaller to help spur new car sales growth in North America.

The 2011 subcompact Ford Fiesta is due here next summer after enjoying tremendous success in both Europe and China.

The North American version of the Fiesta is making its debut at the Los Angeles Auto Show Dec. 2-13.

Based on a platform designed by Mazda (and to be used on the Mazda2 being launched here next year as well), the Fiesta will come in two body styles — a four-door sedan and five-door hatchback. In Europe, only the hatchback is currently offered.

It is the seventh generation of the popular Fiesta line that has been one of the best-selling small cars in Europe for more than three decades.

It is coming back to North America after a short stint here in the late '70s. To say that the Fiesta is an important car for Ford is an understatement.

As Mark Fields, president Ford Americas, puts it, "Small cars are our largest opportunity for growth."

And considering that small cars make up more than a quarter of the entire automotive market, this is a huge segment that Ford has been neglecting for far too many years, concentrating instead on pickups and SUVs.

Ford now realizes that customers no longer buy small cars based on necessity alone.

That may have been the case in the past, particularly south of the border, but in Canada, buyers had been gravitating to small cars in much greater numbers, well before the fuel and credit crises arose.

If sales of the Fiesta in North America mirror those across the pond, Ford has a winner on its hands.

Low rolling resistance tires can improve your gas mileage

If you want to get the most mileage out of a tank of gas, consider investing in low rolling resistance tires.

Rolling resistance, is a measure of the force that it takes to move your tires forward on the road. As you travel along, the weight of your vehicle "deforms" your tire tread where the rubber meets the road.

The resulting deformity generates heat between the tire and the road, which is then wasted in the form of heat as the tire rotates. If new tires are on the horizon, consider low rolling resistance tires; some tire manufacturers are now boasting a 20 per cent reduction in rolling resistance through high-efficiency tires that reduce fuel consumption.

Infiniti of steering options

Nissan's system moves the rear wheels one degree in the same direction as the front wheels for better results

DRIVING FORCE

JIL McINTOSH
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

When changing direction, most vehicles have an inherent limitation: Their front wheels can move, but their rear wheels always point straight ahead. This means that when moving sideways, especially at higher speeds, the rear tires can tend to slide as they try to follow the front wheels. Infiniti counters this with its 4-Wheel Active Steer, available on the all-new Infiniti M

Four-wheel steering has been available in the past, including a version on Chevrolet's pickup trucks, but that system turned the rear wheels at low speeds, in a direction opposite to the front ones, to make it easier to back up. Infiniti's system moves the rear wheels one degree in the same direction as the front wheels, producing better stability and handling at higher speeds. The system also adjusts the steering ratio of the front wheels for better and more stable response at different speed ▶ Nissan Infiniti's new four-wheel Active Steer provides better handling at higher speeds.

"The system looks at what you're doing," says Ian Forsyth, Director of Corporate Planning for Nissan Canada. "It's an active system. It's using the Vehicle Dynamic Control controller, so it's looking at steering angle input, acceleration, brake input and throttle sensing."

There are two actuators, one for each set of wheels, including a high-response motor mounted on the steering column that adjusts the ratio between the steering wheel and the steering rack. This affects how much steering input is needed to change direction. This results in easier turning at low speeds, such as when manoeuvring around a parking lot, and more control at higher speeds.

With both front and rear wheels turning into a curve, the car moves more smoothly around it, and with increased stability. Since sharp steering inputs can be hazardous at higher speeds, the turning angle of the front wheels decreases above 80 km/h. This, along with the slight change in direction at the rear wheels, means the car will move smoothly and under control when moving between lanes.

"The technology isn't designed to take control of the vehicle, but to enhance what you're trying to do," Forsyth says. "The systems know what the driver is doing because of the input, and they assist with it. If you want better response, the system can give it to you."

Wheel facts

- The rear wheels stay straight below 40 km/h, since stability on turns and lane changes isn't an issue at lower speeds. Between 40 km/h and 80 km/h, the rear wheels move in phase with the front wheels.

Sporty, not a spotty past

Last-gen Sentra is sporty and comfortable But be sure to check for any recall work that's be done

If test driving any used Sentra, be sure to listen for any strange squeaking or rubbing noises from the front end.

The specs

- MODEL 2001 to 2006 Nissan Sentra
- VEHICLE TYPE Compact Sedan
- APPROXIMATE USED PRICE RANGE $2,500 to $9,500

The last-generation Sentra brought Nissan's generations-old nameplate into the compact car class formerly occupied by the Altima- — which itself also sized-up back in 2001. Competing with machines like the Civic, Corolla and G5, the Nissan Sentra brought the brand's knack for sporty and stylish vehicles to the highly competitive marketplace.

The four-door model got a selection of four-cylinder engines, starting with a 1.8 liter unit with 126 horsepower. Optionally available was a 2.0 liter mill with 145. Manual or automatic transmissions were both available.

Look for staple features like power locks, windows, and mirrors, cruise control, tilt steering, and remote entry. Tinted glass, a sunroof, alloy wheels and fog-lamps were also available, depending on the model selected.

What Owners Like

Most owners comment positively on the Sentra's relative bang-for-the-buck in the features and fun departments. Engineers seem to have struck a nice balance between ride comfort and handling, and many owners rave about the up-level stereo system, Finally, many owners note that the Sentra offers a surprising amount of leg-room, relative to its overall size.

What Owners Hate

Common complaints include cheap interior trim materials, a noisy engine, and some squeaks and rattles as the car ages.

Common Issues

A failure to start, or random engine stalling, could be caused by a corrosion-promoting foam used in the engine computer module that slowly decomposes and releases small amounts of corrosive gas into the computer.

This can ruin computer connections and lead to a slew of drivability problems and 'check engine light' illumination. This problem could be frustrating, but it's an easy fix– as well as a recall item.

The verdict

Your safest bet in a used Nissan Sentra will be a Nissan-serviced model that's familiar to the selling dealer and has had all the manufacturer's recall work completed.

If everything checks out, you'll likely enjoy one of the compact car market's sportier contenders.

Challenging luxury class

Equus looks to take market share from Lexus and Audi Hyundai entering unchartered territory

JIM ROBINSON
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

Hyundai has literally stepped up to the big time with the 2011 Equus luxury sedan.

At 5.1 metres long, the Equus was designed and built to take on Audi A8, Lexus LS 460 and Mercedes-Benz S550.

Boasting available rear seats with massage function and a centre console that features a beverage cooler, the Equus also comes with just about every driver aid and creature comfort feature you can name.

More importantly, it marks a big step up into unchartered territory for the Korean carmaker.

While Hyundai sells oodles of small and mid-size trucks and cars, their bigger offerings have faced challenges.

The full-size Sedona minivan never sold well and the seven-seat Veracruz CUV is a rare sight on Canadian roads.

So what Hyundai is going to do differently this time around is make it personal.

Not only will they send specialist salespeople to the homes or offices of potential buyers but they will also drop off a car so a customer can take it for a spin on his/her own.

Only 27 dealers across the country in Quebec City, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto (and the surrounding area), Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver will be getting the car.

But is Canada ready for a Hyundai premium luxury car?

At over 2,000 kg, the Equus has a lot of weight to push around and does so surprisingly well for its bulk.

And here's where the perception/reality thing comes in.

It's a challenge Hyundai has faced before, and if history does repeat itself; watch out Lexus, Audi and Mercedes-Benz.

Price

How much will the Equus cost?

Expensive Price was still being negotiated when I drove it but I was told it would start at around $70,000. If this is the case; it is at least a third less than the cost of its main competitors.

▶ The Equus Signature comes extremely well equipped with features such as 19-inch chrome alloy wheels, air suspension system, lane departure warning system, adaptive cruise control, real wood interior, premium leather seating, Alcantara suede headliner and a Lexicon 7.1 discrete surround sound audio system.

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 Your rivals may look cool and confident but they are more worried about you than you need be about them. Yes, they have the upper hand for the time being but your time will come, and quickly.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 Reach out to those you work and do business with and convince them that together you can make things happen. A positive attitude is a must today.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Practical problems require practical solutions and you need to grasp that fact quickly. Great things are possible for you now, but they must be based on tried and trusted methods.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 You may have to explain why you have made certain decisions but you don't have to be defensive about it. Loved ones and work colleagues will forgive you almost anything now, so own up to your sins in fact, be proud of them!

♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 It may be easy to criticize certain individuals but that does not mean you have to do it. They are well aware of their faults and failings.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 This is a good time for business activities, and also for partnerships, so get together with people whose talents you admire and find ways you can work together for your mutual benefit.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 The imminent new moon in your sign means you must do something creative, something that makes the most of your many talents.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Write down your most important aims today, because if you don't you may forget them and that would be such a waste. Making a note of them will convince your subconscious that you are serious.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Put on a confident front and make sure those around you believe you have what it takes. If you look confident you will feel confident, and if you feel confident you will succeed.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Others can bend the rules if that's what they think it takes to succeed but you know it's unnecessary. Cosmic activity in the career area of your chart promises you won't lose out by being honest.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 You need to move out of your comfort zone and try things that don't come naturally to you. Push yourself just a little bit harder and a little bit further each and every day.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 Some people will disapprove of what you are aiming to do, but that won't stop you – in fact it will make you even more determined.
